Looking over all the dope at this calm and peaceful distance I am convinced that the nature of the Jinx that sent the Ginks from Gotham into the discard was a clear lack of gameness. The Athletics simply outgamed the so-called Alderman Aleck Drescher, the live wire who has helped every public enterprise launched for the benefit of his constituents. There were a Socialist, an Anarchist, an Independence Leaguer-probably the only one left in the district—a Democratic Leaguer, whatever that may be, and a trained spellbinder from Fourteenth street, ex-Assemblyman Richard J. Molloy. All the speakers of all nationalities referred to "the issue of the hour," and one can hardly imagine what variegated angles were taken. But they all lined up for Drescher, who is going back to the Board of Addermen for another term. Ghants. In any contest of physical skill, whether on the diamond, the gridiron, he cinder path or within the four ropes, gameness counts for a big percentage as a winning factor. The Giants in "blowing up" as they did at a critical point in the critical game of the series showed plainly that as a team they tacked the heart that might have made their defeat less exasperatingly judicious than it
